LOCATION AND EQUIPMENT

The University of Chicago Law School was established in 1902. It is a member of the Association of American Law Schools and is on the list of approved Law Schools of the American Bar Association. It is situated on the University Quadrangles adjacent to the broad stretch of the Midway. Washington Park lies to the west and Jackson Park, the lake, and the South Park System to the East. The Sixtieth Street station of the Illinois Central Railroad is only thirteen minutes from the Loop, and bus, street railways, and the boulevards of the South Park system provide additional means of transportation.

The Law School occupies a building erected particularly for it in 1904. The building is three stories high, 175 feet long, and 80 feet wide. It is built of stone in the Gothic type of architecture. The semi-English basement contains ample locker space and lounge room. The classrooms are on the first floor and the stackroom on the second floor. On the third floor is the reading-room, a beautiful, high-ceilinged, well-lighted room with ample accommodations for studying. Around the walls are complete sets of English and American law reports and statutes.

The law library contains about 60,000 volumes. It includes all of the American, English, Irish, Scotch, Canadian, Australian, New Zealand, and South African reports: a full collection of English and American statutes and session laws; a large collection of treatises and periodicals; and a working library of French, German, and Spanish law.

Students of the Law School have the use of the other University Libraries, containing over 940,000 volumes.

CURRICULUM

The Law School is organized and arranged so that students who have finished their junior college work and plan to study law may begin the preparation for their professional careers under the supervision and control of a professional school. The first or preprofessional year of work in the law school is devoted to the acquisition of a background of information and intellectual discipline which, while it is cultural in the best use of the word, is also so arranged that it will have a peculiar value to the future law student.

The professional work of the Law School is designed to give a broad and comprehensive preparation for the practice of law. With this end in view, the first year of professional work is devoted to giving the student a careful training in methods of legal analysis and a thorough working knowledge of fundamental legal subjects. In the second and third years of professional training the student proceeds to a mastery of the more advanced branches of law in the various fields of business and corporation law, trusts, property, procedure, practice, public law, and jurisprudence. The methods of instruction vary according to the subject taught and the capacities of the student. In the second, and particularly in the third, year of professional work the student is given an opportunity to engage in individual work designed to give him experience in handling concrete materials and specific legal problems.

THE QUARTER SYSTEM

The work of the Law School, like that of the other parts of the University, is organized upon the quarter basis. The year is divided into the Summer, Autumn, Winter, and Spring quarters. This arrangement gives a student a greater flexibility in the matter of entering the School and in the arrangement of his work. By attending the Law School during the Summer quarters the student is enabled to complete his legal training in two and one-quarter calendar years.
